One day at the shore, Morton and I met a mermaid girl. "I forget how to get home," she sniffed. We took her home and snuck her in through the window. She lay on the carpet, sad and wet. We fed her some seaweed from the market. When dinner was done, we went back to the beach. How could we get her home? A song made us stop in our tracks. Such a perfect tune! The fish girl perked up. "It's my mom!" she said. It was indeed. They thanked us for our help. Then they swam away into the sunset.
